The Newspaper.

Take the most thorough man of the world of your acquaintance—the man most perfectly versed in what goes on in all wasks and conditions of life—who knows when and for what the world is fighting, in this quarter and in that—how it folled its ship—what it pays for gold—how it tills its fields smelts its metals, cooks its food, and writes its novels—and I sak you what he would be without hit newspaper? By what possible machinery could be learn, as he sits at his breakfast, the last news from China, of the last ballet at Paris, the site of the finds at San Francisco, the winner at Newmarket, the pantomine at the Oimpic, the encyclical of the Pope?

It is with the actual, passing, daily arising incidents of life, a man ought to be thoroughly acquainted, bringing to their consideration all the aid his reading and reflection can supply; so that he acither that is not a dogred increditity on one side, nor a fatal facility of belief on the other. In an age so widely speculative as to the present, eager to impure and not overgiven to scruple—such men as these jare invainable to society; and a whole corps of college professors would be less effective in dispelling error or asserting truth, than these people trained in all the didlects of the press.

Without my newspaper, life would narrow witeful to the small limits of my personal.

Without my newspaper, life would narrow witeful to the small limits of my personal.

these people trained in all the dialects of the press.

Without my newspaper, life would narrow itself to the small limits of my personal experience, and humanity be compressed into the ten or fifteen people I mix with. Now I refuse to accept this. I have but a sixpence in consols, but I want to know how they stand. I was never—and am never likely to be—in Japan; but I have an intense cariosity to know what our troops did at Yokohama. I deplore the people who suffered by the railroad smash; and I sympathize with the newly married couple so beautifully depluted in the 'illustrated,' as they drove off in a chaise aid four. I like the letters of the correspondents, with their little gricvandes about unpunctual trains or some unwarrantable omissions in the Liturgy. I even like the people who chronicle the rainfull, and record little facts about the mildness of the season.

As for the advertisements, I regard them people who chronicle the rainfall, and record little facts about the mildness of the season.

As for the advertisements, I regard them as the mirror of the age. Show me but one page of the "wants" of any country, and I engage myself to give a sketch of the current civilization of the period. What glimpses of rose interiors do we gain by these brief paragraphs! How full of suggestions and story they are. Think of the social circle at Chapman's, that advertises for a lodger "that has a good voice, and would appreciate the domestic life of a retired family devoted to music and the fine arts." Imagine the more exalted propriety of those who want a "foot-man in a serious family where there are means of grace and a kitchen maid kept." Here a widow in affluent circumstances announces her intention to remarry. Here a naturalist proposes his readiness to exchange bugs and and eaterpillars with another devotee. And here, a more practical physiologist wants from three to four lively rats for his terrier. Are not those life etchings? Do you want anything more plain or palpable to tell you where and how you live?

Now I wan't neither beetles, rats nor widows, but I'm not to be cut off from my sympathies with the people who do! In the very proponion that all wise things do enter my acquirements, do I desire to know who and what are the people who need them, why they need them, and what they do with them when they get them. I am human to the very tips of my fingers, and there is not a mood in humanity without its interest for me. I may possibly be able to rub on without my legacy, but I could'nt exist without my uewspaper.— Cornelius O'Dord, in Blackwood.

About Marrying.

About Marrying.

About Marrying.

Statesmen, political economists and divines reckon marriage an important institution. High and ancient authority propounces it honorable. Families are nurseries of the state and church. Men and women are raised in them. Married life is a joy and a discipline. It is replete with stimulus to good action and with motives of self-government. It is not good for man to be alone, or woman either. Single blessedness is a myth. We have some fears that it will go out of fashion through the expulsive power of some of the new fashions springing up. We don't object to the fashion of fashions, so to speak, but to the costliness of them. Expansive crimoline involves expansive prices. A bonnet at thirty dollars, and a very inconsiderable thing at that can not be attractive to a thirty dollars, and a very inconsiderable thing at that, can not be attractive to a prudent young man. And so, on the other hand, a fast horse and a box of cigars are not the things to begin life with. Expensive habits in the young of either sex are not an spicious of good marriage prospects.

not auspicious of good marriage prospects.

Without being mercenary, the young men may be pradent and financial calculations suggested by carly love-thoughts are not favorable to their speedily maturing. Too much costliness in the adorament of the person operates like too much splendor in church edifices, suggesting ideas of expensive attendance and associations, and so repelling advances that might otherwise be made and welcomed with mutual advantage. Living in cities is costly enough at the least. Produgility of expense may be indulged by the wealthy till they have spent their resources, taught their children how to do it. But for the great mass of the people, living by honest industry in professions, trades and subordinate positions, the alternative is presented, to practice economy, or to experience embarrassments, and in relation to marriage, to proceed with cauthon, or to encounter the proceed with caution, or to encounter the risk of unimppiness. We fear that the caution, suggested by the causes referred to, prevent many from "prospering," and shut out twice the number from the honer-able and happy state of matrimoty.

The Ludhen Cror is Micritan.—The number of saw mills returned in Michigan last May was 1,073, being an addition of 151 since 1864. Saw mills operated by water power have decreased 60 in number in the last decentum, while steam saw mills have nearly doubled in number. The number of feet of lumber sawed the past year, as returned by 164 mills, is 621,478,904, being 68:2 per cent. more than in 1864. Giving to 38 sawmills making no returns the average amount sawed by those which were returned in may 1864, the production of Michigan lumber in 1865 would be 384,546,636 feet, or in round numbers 700,000,000 feet. But this is short of the real quantity. Nearly half of the 18 mills not returning the number of feet sawed am located at the pineries, having gangs of saws, and manufacturing and shipping annually millions of feet. The annual amount of lumber sawed in Michigan is probably not less than $60,000,000 feet.

beads as will be found on the head-dresses of one church-full of these devotees, and we only account for it by supposing that there is really liquidity about the waterfails, which are thus bead-dammed.

A Northern cotemporary accounts for the abouninable dressing of his woman during the war, by presuming that they wished to make themselves so histories as to drive the men into the army. What do they want now? From the tips of their abominable square for their plastered, tightly-drawn hair, there is not one article of dress but is intended to alter that shape which was made after Divinity's own image.

Walk with your sweet heart, and in the loops of her voluminous skirts are provided pit-fails for your feet, and exhibitors of hers. She kineds down in church, and unless one cheek is tarned down, (thus exposing the other, which explains the thing.) of faills her hist. Kiss her, and you are in danger of being overwhelmed by an avalanches of rats and natice; and as for putting your arm around your wife's neck, the bump of horselfair, sotton balls, biscuit and what not, renders that impossible.

What the President Must Do. The New York World thus expresses it-

elf as to the duty of the President: The President must either discomfit the The President must either discount the radicals or suffer a disconfiture himself. If his Message is firm and explicit, he has too much self-respect to recede from ground deliberately taken in the face of the world. If the radicals do not succumb, he will appeal to the country in the Congressional elections of next year, when he is morally certain of a victury.

But if the President, in his Annual Message, should take refuge in vagueness and indecision, he would lose the high vantage ground which gives him so commanding a osition, and makes him master of the sit-position, and makes him master of the sit-uation.

The Radicals seeing in this indecision an acknowledgment of their power, would take new courage. Having discovered that he feared them; that he had been reduced by them to a state of vaciliation, they would fol-low up their advantage. The President hav-ing thus forfeited the confidence of that part of his fellow-citizens who had faith in his vigor of character and political courage, he would be at the mercy of the Radicals, and compelled to capitulate on such terms as they, in their forbearance, might think fit to grant him. The country has mistaken the character of Andrew Johntson if he submits to such a humiliation.
